STATE OF IDAHO

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR
BOISE

CECIL D. ANDRUS
GOVERNOR

The continued growth of the Executive Branch of the State Government has resulted in the need for one centralized reference source. This publication is designed to meet the need which has so often been expressed by state agencies, local governments, legislators and citizens of Idaho.

The Executive Branch of Idaho Government also serves as the end product of the inventory phase of a continuing executive reorganization study.

Every attempt has been made to insure the accuracy of the material within the publication. The contents have been provided by the agencies themselves, edited to meet the format, and approved by the agency heads for publication in this form. The cooperation of all state agencies was necessary to compile the information; their support for this needed publication has been most gratifying.

This compilation, containing statements on two hundred sixty state instrumentalities should be of great assistance to government, business, industry, educational institutions and individual citizens.

Sincerely,

CECIL D. ANDRUS

FOREWORD

The Constitution of the State of Idaho, adopted in 1889, vested the Governor with the supreme executive authority, provided for the election of a number of independent executive officials, and made provision for the addition of such agencies as the Legislature might determine to be necessary. As new functions were assumed by state government, many new agencies were created. In 1919, following a national trend toward reorganization, the Idaho Legislature departmentalized the agencies under the Governor's direction and created nine executive departments. The ideal of governmental efficiency was specifically embodied in that legislation. Section 67-2510, Idaho Code, reads:

"The Governor shall devise a practical and working basis for cooperation and coordination of work, eliminating duplication and overlapping of functions."

It was clearly the intent of the Legislature that the executive branch approximate as closely as possible the ideals of efficiency and harmony.

Since then, a number of organizational modifications have been made periodically including the establishment of various independent boards and commissions in response to specific needs, and several studies, one of which resulted in the creation by the Legislature in 1967, of the Department of Administrative Services. Basically, however, no substantial reorganization has taken place since 1919. The result is the existence of a massive bureaucratic administrative structure as documented in the pages of this report.

Article IV, Section 5 of the Constitution of the State of Idaho reads:

"The supreme executive power of the State is vested in the Governor, who shall see that the laws are faithfully executed."

Thus, the Governor of the State of Idaho is the servant of the people and the chief executive of state government. In order to adequately fulfill his responsibility as the people's servant and the principal administrative officer of the State, the Governor must rely upon the assistance of the various administrative agencies of the executive branch which are established under constitutional and legislative guidelines. If the Governor is to be a chief executive in fact as well as in name, the agencies of the executive branch must be organized in such a manner that they are responsive to administrative direction and accountable to the people, the Chief Executive, and the Legislature.

If the State's administrative organization is to be responsive to the needs of the people, its structure should be as simple and free from complexity as possible with a minimum of overlapping and duplication of functions. It should be designed in such a way that lines of authority and responsibility are readily apparent to the interested citizen. Without awareness and understanding on the part of the citizens of the State, government ceases to be a servant of the people.

In the past decade, the State of Idaho has experienced a period of unprecedented expansion in its population and economy. With this expansion has come increasing demands for new and improved governmental services. State government in Idaho has grown significantly in response to those demands. The years 1960-70 saw Idaho's budget increase from $173 million to $355 million, an increase of 205 per cent. The number of governmental agencies within the executive branch of state government has also grown until, as of the date of this publication, over 250 separate entities, most of which are directly responsible to the Governor, burden the original administrative structure established by the Constitution.

These many governmental agencies were not created needlessly. Each one was created to satisfy a particular need or group of needs. However, this vast proliferation of separate administrative structures has blurred organizational lines, contributed to overlapping functions and duplication of effort, and hampered meaningful executive control.

If Idaho's executive structure is to be accountable and responsive to the needs of the citizens, the policy of the Legislature, and the executive direction of the Governor, the number of separate units within the executive branch must not be permitted to grow beyond a fixed point. When the number becomes too great, the executive organization becomes cumbersome, unwieldy and unresponsive. The bureaucratic reality falls further away from the Constitutional ideal. Simply by turning through the pages of this document the reader will see that the number of units within the Executive Branch of the Idaho State Government has become excessive.

On May 10, 1971, Governor Cecil Andrus announced that the accomplishment of a major reorganization of the Executive Branch of Idaho State Government would be a prime objective of the current administration. It is the recommendation of the reorganizational staff who have prepared this report that immediate steps be taken by the Governor and the Legislature to reduce the number of existing administrative agencies within the Executive Branch and to establish a permanent limit beyond which the number of executive agencies will not be permitted to grow.

Those powers granted the Department of Special Services are derived solely from executive order. An executive order issued by Governor Robert E. Smylie in 1964 established the Idaho Office of Economic Opportunity within the Office of the Governor. The same executive order created the Office of Economic Opportunity Advisory Council. The functions of the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Advisory Council were stated to be:

1. To serve as central liaison for the state of Idaho with the Federal Office of Economic Opportunity for administration of funds available under the Economic Opportunity Act, to provide management of such funds and the development of coordinated programs among all participating groups and agencies, and to serve as advocates of the poor at all levels of government.
2. To develop and implement plans and programs to be carried out under the auspices of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 and other federal and state legislation aimed at alienating poverty in the state.
3. To supply technical assistance to communities and other groups seeking to sponsor and make available programs under the act.
4. To provide effective liaison with other private and public agencies and organizations with an interest in the program to the end that the total resources of Idaho may be mobilized in the effort to end economic distress.

Executive Order 68-2, issued by Governor Samuelson, established the Office of Economic Opportunity as a separate administrative office of the state of Idaho. The agency was placed under the direction of the Executive Director of the Department of Employment. Those functions of the office prescribed by the earlier executive order were maintained.

Executive Order 68-7, issued by Governor Samuelson, placed the office under the Governor's office and changed its name to the State Economic Opportunity Office. The office's functions remained unchanged.

Executive Order 70-2, issued by Governor Samuelson, changed the name of the agency from the State Economic Opportunity Office to the present Department of Special Services. The order also called for the inclusion of the State Office on Aging, the State Economic Opportunity Office and the Idaho Commission on Human Rights as separate and distinct divisions within the Department.
